This invention relates to a bonding system for the liquid phase bonding of substrates and more particularly to a liquid phase bonding system in which a bonding substrate may be attached to a bonding surface without the necessity of a heat activator applied to the bonding surface prior to bonding. The manufacture of optical fiber waveguides of single mode fiber is known in the prior art. As disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,573,142, a single mode fiber waveguide is manufactured using a stainless steel capillary tube. A cladding tube of glass is prepared and loaded into a furnace. A fiber is placed in the capillary tube and the glass cladding tube and the capillary tube are loaded into the furnace. The capillary tube is heated to a temperature of 900.degree. C. and held at that temperature for an hour. After the hour has elapsed, the system is allowed to cool at room temperature. The stainless steel capillary tube then is removed from the cladding tube, and the cladding tube is inserted into a pedestal. In the present practice, the fiber is bonded to the glass cladding tube by placing it in a test chamber and subjecting the fiber to a heat source. The fiber is heated, and the fiber is subsequently bonded to the glass cladding tube by high temperature chemical vapor deposition. Another method of bonding a fiber waveguide to a cladding tube is by adhesives. The cladding tube and fiber are placed in a furnace where a glue is applied to the substrate. The cladding tube and fiber are next removed from the furnace and pressed to the cladding tube with the aid 3e33713323
