{id:2,name:'old2'},
{id:3,name:'old3'},
{id:4,name:'old4'},
{id:5,name:'old5'},
{id:6,name:'old6'},
{id:7,name:'old7'},
{id:8,name:'old8'} ] I have another object that provides additional information about the contents of these objects. In this example each element provides information about the category and the name, but this information may be more complex with an arbitrary number of attributes. The problem I'm struggling with is how to get a result in which only those projects are returned that match all the properties of all the properties in the second object. So I'd like to end up with: var newProjects =[

PC Gamer said "the Jackbox games are the perfect way to beat the social distancing blues". Wired considered. According to the RIAA, more than 7 million American households do not receive cable television. This means there are a lot of people who don't get the cable services they paid for. I pay $39.99 a month for the basic network and sports in our area, but our local cable company costs me twice that much. In addition to a monthly fee, our cable has an additional $4 fee each month if you get the HD service. There are exceptions to this

Did you know that Fibbage XL is a part of Jackbox Party Pack 2?Q: Two Base64 url's with the same contents (First post) I am using a free account called otsu. I want to generate a base64 encoded image but it seems that there are two duplicates. I tried finding the difference between the base64 strings so I would know how to insert a modified version of the image but the base64 text do not differ. I tried searching the internet, website of OTSU, the website of base64 website. I found out that it's a very common issue, but all the solutions I found didn't work for me. Here is my
