The changes can be reflected on the pitch in "Player Feel," FIFA's all-new artificial intelligence that sets player characteristics for every player in every match. The technology uses the player's movement based off of their style of play and their current position to set the "feel" for how the player will act. For example, if a player is in the defensive position, they will be more aggressive and less passive. "This technology was built for FIFA 19, and this year we looked back to see what worked and what didn't," said Andreas Segers, Producer at EA DICE. "In addition to adding gameplay efficiency, we took a look at what players like and what their animations look like and tried to enhance those elements." Sebastien Thill added, "We tried to make everything more realistic and feel like real life. To accomplish this, players on the pitch will feel like they have more action and purpose to their animations, while their player models have more life, shape, and are less rigid than in previous games." Players can also increase the damage they receive from aerial duels through "Player Spend," which, when activated, allows players to spend a limited amount of Health Points that will return after the player's next impact. Additional animations on the pitch, including the use of the air, were added to help players feel like they are fighting for the ball as they try to land a tackle and win more aerial duels. "FIFA World Cup" in Motion "We are excited to bring the World Cup to life like never before, with FIFA World Cup in Motion," said Segers. "Players will have the chance to feel the emotions of the World Cup in motion with animations in real-time, including emotional responses. "Our goal has always been to bring the World Cup to life on the pitch with authentic and realistic physics, but we are investing more time into the emotion surrounding this experience as well," he continued. "Players will have more drive and purpose. Our goal is to bring the World Cup to life on the pitch with authentic and realistic physics, but we are investing more time into the emotion surrounding this experience as well." The International World Cup will run every 16.9.2018, in 10 different languages, to celebrate and preserve the sport's rich diversity and cultures. Development Interviews IN THE
