The new feature can be used to adapt game play on the fly and is available to all gameplay modes. The technology also tracks the footwork and movement of players in attack and defense to dynamically adapt how players develop on-ball, off-ball actions and transitions. "As developers, we've long said we are committed to continuous innovation and we're pleased to deliver a new feature to the FIFA franchise that truly pushes the boundaries of realism," said David Rutter, Executive Producer at EA SPORTS. "With gameplay that is more intuitive and fluid, FIFA 22 delivers the most realistic experience yet and is the perfect title to compete on the greatest playing fields in the world." HyperMotion Technology empowers gameplay elements on the ball to dynamically adapt to the player's movement, to reflect the player's current momentum and current technical approach. This enables a variety of new gameplay features, such as dynamic dribbling animations, and allows players to be more in control of their style of play. On-ball actions are also now more responsive, as they react to player motions and jump to guard the player. "HyperMotion Technology is the evolution of the human game, which allows players to be more expressive, dynamic and in-the-moment in every game they play," said Danny Williams, Senior Producer. "We're creating player movement that looks more natural, faster and freer than ever before." FIFA 22 is designed to deliver game play that is more responsive and authentic. On-ball actions will be more intuitive, and collisions have been improved, allowing for some of the most realistic, immersive and dynamic gameplay in the franchise's history. The new Enhanced Player Modeling System has been redesigned for more realistic, expressive and dynamic models. The new Extreme A.I. mode (featuring AI improvements, enhanced training tools and unique training environments) delivers a deeper story, more challenging gameplay and a new dynamic in-match experience. There are now 82 new Player Skills, including new Fouls and Tackles, along with the introduction of Bullshots, Handballs, Hybrid Floaters and more. FIFA 22 is the latest addition to EA SPORTS Football Club. With FIFA 22, FIFA 20 and FIFA 19 players will be able to connect online, join or create their own leagues, compete for cups and earn rewards to gain cards and club points.
