CHAPTER 1: THE ANIMATION FRONT (AND BACK) - The Development Team Figure 1: The game's logo.

Although I've been at it since 1999, I don't like to call myself a game developer as of yet. I'm a public servant. I'm a Professor of Medieval Studies, with a minor in Romance Languages. That's my day job. Gaming is my hobby. It's what I love to do. But even with the talented, dedicated team of people we have, I sometimes have trouble putting it into words. So, I'm going to break this down into a four-part article series: my design process, my technical team, my artist team, and my writer team. I'll also give out some shout-outs to my inner circle of genius. Most importantly, I'll share some techniques for those of us who would like to dabble in game design.

ART/PROGRAPHY - The concept art and character design group. The "a" in GGGA stands for Animation. We had this in mind the entire development process from day one. The team behind GGGA Before I take on the rest of the article series, let me give a shout-out to everyone who worked on this game. Special shout-out to a few people in particular: Ahh... that's right! There's no "Games" in GGGA. Instead, we can find a bunch of symbols like: It stands for Game Character. A Character is any person you're playing in the game. Also, we call our games "characters".

Figure 2: The symbol for Game Character. And the main character of GGGA is just that, a character. He's a boy named Melody. He looks a bit like a Japanese Mythological creature: Melody's design. My favorite thing about Melody is that he can seem totally... innocent. Here's a picture I took of him while sitting next to a large stained glass window. The inscription on that window reads "Never Sorrow." I love it. At the time I drew this picture, it didn't yet have the name "GGGA" in it. The Game's Project Planning Before you go thinking I'm weird, here's a couple reasons why I'm not really crazy. The final story line is only about 80 pages long. To say it

What's new in All Hail The Cook-o-tron:

The Horror of Minos is a drama in three acts, with music written by Adolphe Adam and set to a prologue by François-Joseph Gossec. The playwright and librettist Paul Lacombe took a different approach and isolated the three-act structure. The piece was first performed at the Théâtre-Italien in 1882. The plot concerns King Minos of Crete, who executed the Minotaur in the Labyrinth, a novel place of trial for wayward youths. The king uses the play to interrogate and judge Ariadne, his lover, for he suspects that she had tricked him into giving her the Keys of the Labyrinth, which she used to retrieve the youthful Theseus, a "mortal enemy of Zeus". Plot summary Act I The prologue introduces the main character, Ariadne, whom the poet paints as an embodiment of the spirit of love. Later, under the influence of the king of Crete (Atrous), Ariadne leads Theseus unwittingly into the Labyrinth of Crete in order to save him from the Minotaur, now a ferocious beast in the labyrinth. Meanwhile, her father and friend of her husband, King Minos, has been killed by the Minotaur. Minos, furious, prepares to execute her, but instead orders her to be immured in the labyrinth for her vengeful husband. Act II The poet, describing the Minotaur as "the thing that lives in his pit", leads the audience through the labyrinth in his underground tunnel. The god who holds the labyrinth is the Lord of the Sun Apollo, opposed to the dark Lord of the Moon, Hades (who imprisoned Ariadne's father). Minos, exultant in his triumph over the tortured youths, has condemned Ariadne to remain until she gives the Labyrinth's key to him. To him, it is "absolutely necessary that she have his arbitrary word as to her eternal punishment. The others are only swept up by the thousand currents of humanity, whereas she is the quarry for his incertitude". He interviews her, forcing her to admit to her own fault in the death of her husband. Sensing that the King is also a murderer, Ariadne says: "To you, sir, I accept this crime, I feel it...But I am still not telling you the truth. So I have been like an unfaithful wife: when I said to my lord, '
