The UK is suffering from a national meningitis outbreak and the country is requesting help from the international community. A spokesperson for the National Health Service (NHS) revealed in a statement that the healthcare system is "struggling to cope with a surge of cases" and there have been over 150 outbreaks of meningitis across the UK. The N.H.S. is treating up to 60 patients with meningitis every week. In total, the NHS reported 612 patients with meningitis were seen between March 4-15. The most common form of the disease is bacterial meningitis, while around 17% of people develop viral meningitis. Additionally, the University Health Network in Toronto reported 23 cases of meningitis among their pediatric patients in Canada and the United States. The N.H.S. report released by Prime Minister Boris Johnson did not reveal any new information on the UK meningitis outbreak. London, a city in the southernmost region of England, has been suffering from a massive meningitis outbreak that has persisted since March 4. According to The Guardian, "as of 14 May, 346 cases of suspected meningitis have been confirmed in the capital, of which 341 have tested positive for bacterial meningitis, making the outbreak the worst in living memory." At least 23 people have died of the disease, a quarter of which occurred in the London borough of Lambeth. Richard Wynter, Lambeth Council's director of public health, explained in a statement that the majority of victims are in their 30s or 40s, and several of them had preexisting conditions such as diabetes or asthma. "The bacterial meningitis outbreaks that we have had over the past two years, could have been more aggressive if the country did not take swift action to stop them," Wynter said. "This is a major public health threat to a large population, and a timely, organized response is needed to address this problem." The five people who were the first to die of the meningitis outbreak was an elderly woman and her two adult sons. The oldest man died on May 5, while the youngest victim was only 16 years old. The death toll is expected to keep rising as more cases surface. According to the NHS, the disease can affect

When Brody died, the detectives say, he broke down in a car at a restaurant and said to them, "I lost all hope of getting out of here". For so many of the madmen who gave up so much hope, the wait for freedom seemed interminable. So an escape might come as a welcome relief. As Steve Wragg, an ex-prisoner of the Nolan house, says: "The support from behind the bars was a big thing. Until you get out there's so many people saying, 'Well you had a bit of luck there, that's why you were let out'. Then suddenly you realise you've not done it alone." "Early release" is a phrase that brings a face to the thought of prison release. "As soon as the ink dries on it and the paper is signed, I'm out," says Philip Rayner. "You get a different reception. People suddenly say, 'How did you manage to do that?' 'I've found that the support from people behind bars was a big thing. It helps. People do say things like, 'If you do this it'll be better for you, if you'd have done that, you'd have got a shorter time'. At some stage a person can get the message, but they're always looking for an excuse, no matter what they say." The hope of release rests on the shoulders of the Parole Board. The director 6d1f23a050
